Reuse, Recycle, way to restore nature, environmental laws, soil degradation, water Conservation, sustainable goals. The posters were prepared by M.Sc. students of the Environmental science department. Their diverse perspectives and creative expressions contributed to the richness of the event. Each poster provided educational content, presenting facts, statistics, and information about the significance of forests and the threats they face. Visitors had the opportunity to learn about the role of forests in biodiversity conservation, carbon sequestration, climate regulation, and the livelihoods of communities dependent on forest resources. An informative video of UNEP Reducing deforestation was displayed to visitors and provided more information.

Outcome: The World Forest Day poster exhibition was a resounding success, generating awareness about the importance of forests and inspiring action towards their conservation. Through creative expression and educational outreach, the event effectively conveyed the message that forests are vital for the well-being of our planet and future generations. It also highlighted the critical role that individuals and communities can play in protecting and restoring forest ecosystems.

Conclusion: The activity was successfully conducted with students' enthusiastic participation and curiosity to learn more about our forest and methods to conserve it.
