and receive feedback prior to the real thing.

Preparing to move on to a career after completing a degree program is an important step to success. A part of the preparation one will want to take on is to complete a mock interview, also known as practice interviewing. College career centers along with career counselors offer an in-person mock interview for one to practice

Proper preparation will prevent a poor interview performance as long as the mock interview is taken seriously. Prepare for the practice interview in the same manner as one would for the actual meeting, including arriving 15 minutes in advance, using a notebook to take down notes on what the interviewer recommends, and dress as you would for a real-life situation.

What this means is, a good resume will get you in the door. But a good interview will get you on the payroll. Some of the main advantages of the mock interview are:

- It will reduce interview anxiety by familiarizing you with the situation.
- It will boost your confidence about the things you are doing well.
- It will allow you to preview any interviewing weaknesses you have.
- It gives you the opportunity to receive constructive feedback from an interviewing professional.
